Last month saw a goodly turnout from members and partners for The Winter Competition and Social. The standard of turning on display was considered by all to be very high.

As a departure from the norm, Dave had arranged for an ex-BBC Producer, Tim McDonald, to give us a talk on derivations of well known sayings and most enlightening it was too.

Hang on to those candlesticks.....

It's now 2012 and I'm looking out for the next competition, 'Wizardry in Wood' aka The Worshipful Company. Nothing yet, of course, on their website, it still shows that the competition deadline being extended to 11th June 2010. Bang up to date as usual!!!

Strange though, I did find some information for this year's competition on the Bodgers website of all places. If you wish to enter the 'Wizardry in Wood' Competitions and are happy to dust off your pole lathe then you have the choice of a 'Talking Stick' or a 'Quaiche'.....You do not know what they are?.....well it just shows that 'Their Worships' think us bodgers are just that little bit more sophisticated.

Also on that site I came across another category - 34 candlesticks required for their banqueting table. No prize money, just the prestige. Height must be 33cms and use a provided sconce. Is yours 33cms? (What's the betting that you have to pay through the nose for that sconce—just to keep the riff-raff out?)

Free £5 notes.....

I thought that would get your attention. Please note that there was an error in your programme issued last month. Can you please change the date of the June meeting from the 10th to the 24th (the hall is booked for a wedding).
